Dealing with Family Day

Number of respondents: 324

Other Responses:

- As the sole operator/employee I'll work if I have a job booked, otherwise I'll take it off. Being self employed, will probably work from home
- Depends on how our bank & founders react
- Depends on my work load
- Honor it and let it be a happy day for the employees. They will do better work for that.
- It is a cost and burden which does nothing for business competitiveness against the rest of the world; perhaps the chamber should let the people of this province know what it has cost business in money alone; how does our auto sector feel about this and our manufacturing industry which is already being decimated and now has a further financial burden. Finally if family days were so good why don't we have 3 or 4 more; more of a good thing is better than less isn't it?
- Treat as holiday and drop Heritage Day as a paid holiday
- Treat it as a holiday and reduce paid Floater Day allotment by one day.
- Treat it as a holiday and eliminates a drop day that was previously scheduled by local management.
- Use a floater
- Vote the Liberals out of office
- We already have Heritage Day. There must be a better way to buy my vote E.G. reduce taxes
- We are currently looking covering this holiday through the Ministry of Labour
- We will be fully operational as our schedule was established long before the provincial government decided to establish this holiday
- We will not recognize family day as we already give 12 days per year, therefore the employees have a greater benefit.
- Will not recognize Family Day as company already provides more days off than employment standards "provides greater benefit"
- Won't recognize it
- Work day if clients are working, holiday if not
- Work half day
- We are on contract and each set our own hours, no additional pay for the holiday.
- Not recognize it as a family day because I am home-based – but with honour other companies decisions.
